Turn down the ringing and reclaim peace

Dear <First name>,

Do you or someone you know experience an annoying or troublesome ringing, buzzing or whooshing sound in your ears or head?

Millions of people in Australia experience tinnitus – an internally perceived ringing, roaring, whooshing or chirping sound. In mild cases these sounds can cause an occasional annoyance. But for those with severe tinnitus, the condition can make it difficult to relax, concentrate, and sleep.

Is there a cure?

While there is currently no tinnitus cure (unless the underlying cause of your tinnitus can be reversed), scientific research has proven that relief is possible. The most effective approach is to treat the condition’s most common cause¹ – underlying hearing loss – with the latest technology. Alongside expert coaching, hearing aids can help to cope with the ringing noise in your head. Through treating the hearing loss, patients usually also find they enjoy improved hearing in previously difficult situations such as noisy restaurants.

Miniature miracles

Treating hearing loss often involves fitting discreet, modern hearing aids. Once set up by a qualified hearing expert, these boost and clarify real-world sounds such as speech. They also provide you with the latest technology features such as Bluetooth connectivity, voice assistance at a tap, empowering smart apps and more.
